The introduction of GST is a single move enveloping all indirect taxes that will make a single unified common market. It is single tax on the supply of goods or service, right from the manufacturer to the consumer. All other indirect taxes were abolished after GST implementation. This paper highlights the tax structure of India, concept of GST and its impact on Indian economy benefits along with types of GST returns.

Keywords: Tax structure, GST, Economy

Introduction:

In the ever changing economic scenario globalization, liberalization and privatization policies of the Government, in recent years, have made an indelible impact by bringing into a new economic system in India. Opening up of domestic economies to international markets has led to a number of opportunities to every participating country along with the threat of being exploited by the counter parts. So, it is a race. Race of the economies to derive economic benefits to the maximum possible extent by fulfilling the needed requirements. To what extent we are able to exploit the economic benefits depends upon the extent we are able to create an environment congenial for such an activity. Over the centuries the system of taxation has been shaped and reshaped to make it acceptable, effective and efficient. In recent years, India has been viewed as an attractive and dynamic investment, and has witnessed an increased presence of multinational enterprises (MNEs) and a consequential increase in cross-border trade. This has created many opportunities to the Government for improving tax system of the country. In India, since the inception of New Economic Policy (NEP) in 1991, a host of significant developments have taken place in the tax system. The importance of 'taxation' from the point of view of shaping the growth of the economy in the upward direction along with accruing adequate revenue to the Government needs no exaggeration. As the economy grows the tentacles of taxes become longer and stronger and the Government in ensuring desired socio-economic results. Though the taxes are as old as mankind itself, the system governing the taxes is on continuous reform and modification. In the contemporary status, where the economy is huge in size, assesseees are umpteen in number, revenue collected is mammoth in quantity and technology used in administration is complex and advanced the Government has herculean task of managing the tax department efficiently and effectively.

Objectives of Study :

1. To study the taxation system of India

• Abstract:

This paper presents a review and assessment of the E-waste management system of Government of India. This Research paper mostly describes the e-waste management through the rules & regulations of Government of India. E-waste effects on human life. What is the need of electronic waste management? "E-wastes are considered dangerous, as certain components of some electronic products contain materials that are hazardous, depending on their condition and density. The hazardous content of these materials pose a threat to human health and environment. Discarded computers, televisions, VCRs, stereos, copiers, fax machines, electric lamps, cell phones, audio equipment and batteries if improperly disposed can leach lead and other substances into soil and groundwater. Many of these products can be reused, refurbished, or recycled in an environmentally sound manner so that they are less harmful to the ecosystem.

• Introduction:

"Electronic waste" or "E-Waste" may be defined as discarded computers, office electronic equipment, entertainment device electronics, mobile phones, television sets, and refrigerators. This includes used electronics which are destined for reuse, resale, salvage, recycling, or disposal. Others are reusable (working and repairable electronics) and secondary scrap (copper, steel, plastic, etc.) to be "commodities", and reserve the term "waste" for residue or material which is dumped by the buyer rather than recycled, including residue from reuse and recycling operations, because loads of surplus electronics are frequently commingled (good, recyclable, and non-recyclable), several public

The information revolution has most clearly invaded our homes and our live has improved substantially¹. The growing importances of new technologies result with the acceptance of the idea of a new kind of society, with a new age known as knowledge society. Knowledge society is a society that creates, shares and uses knowledge for the prosperity weel-being of its people and it's a society with workforce largely of a wide variety of "knowledge workers". In the knowledge society, technology is one of the most important factors of any production and service activity. Knowledge Societies are identified as societies based on the creation, dissemination and utilization of information and knowledge. It is a society with an economy in which knowledge is acquired, created, disseminated and applied to enhance economic and social development.

Knowledge-based society implies putting to good account knowledge – which is a key component of national intellectual capital – at a higher level. In such a society, knowledge – the result of all knowledge processes – is the main competitive advantage at national, organizational and individual level. The increasing complexity of activities, the information-based society, as well as the accelerated rhythm with which technical and technological innovations are created require new competences, which result subsequent to the aggregation of the new knowledge that society members acquire through a continuous learning process. Consequently, in the knowledge-based society and economy, human resources are permanently included in the learning processes both at institutional level (in schools, high schools, colleges, universities, academies etc.) and at an organizational one (in private, non-profit and public organizations).
